Atlantic Business Wins Gold at Atlantic Journalism Awards

(May 2, 2009) Atlantic Business Magazine is proud to announce that our New Brunswick correspondent Alec Bruce and freelance contributor Denise Flint have both won Gold awards at this year's Atlantic Journalism Awards (AJAs). The AJAs recognize journalistic excellence in Atlantic Canada.

Alec Bruce won a Gold award in the Commentary category for "Is Atlantic Canada truly on its own?," an entertaining and provocative examination of Atlantic Canada's competitive spirit. Denise Flint took home the top prize in the Atlantic Magazine – Best Profile category for her fast-paced, insightful story about Labrador's most well-known and accomplished entrepreneur, Melvin Woodward.

We also salute our Nova Scotia correspondent Eleanor Beaton for her second-place finish in the Atlantic Magazine – Best Profile category for her profile of Nova Scotia blueberry and media mogul, John Bragg, as well as her Gold award win in the Atlantic Magazine – Best Article category. Also, a huge nod of congratulations to our Addendum columnist Sandra Phinney for her finalist entries in the Atlantic Magazine – Best Profile and Atlantic Magazine – Best Article categories.

Congratulations to all our winners!
